Post-masters degree

The post-masters degree are degrees accredited by the Conference of Grandes Ecoles.

These courses of around 13 months' duration including a company internship of six months are open to any candidate holding a master's level qualification (from an engineering university, a university business school, a national research or professional master's - e.g. master of advanced studies (DEA or DESS), or an equivalent international qualification) or by accreditation of professional skills.

The post-master degree is a complementary programme aimed at graduates who already have, in most cases an initial professional experience. This course is also accessible as a continuing education programme.

The Master of Renewable Marine Energies has specific admission procedures as outlined in his course descriptions.
